holder of the scene, when she saw her second and only living child torn from her and carried into captivity, sunk under the affliction, and gave herself up to a stolid apathy, little short of despair. One of Mrs. Slocum's children, had, with a sagacity beyond her years, at the first appearance of the savages, snatched up the youngest child, and fled to the Fort, where she gave the alarm, and a party started at once for the houses, but the Indians were already beyond the reach of successful pursuit.

In a short time after the above melancholy bereavement, Mrs. Slocum was called upon to part with her husband and father, who were both shot and scalped by a party of Indians, while foddering cattle near the house. Thus, in the short space of six weeks, was that happy household broken up and destroyed, and its surviving members wrapped in misery, as with a mantle. Her religion sustained Mrs. Slocum, in her hour of trial, and she threw herself and her nine remaining children upon the mercy of her Heavenly Father, and bowed her head without a murmur to His decree. For the dead she did not mourn—they were at rest, and no sorrow or useless weeping could restore them to her again. But her lost daughter, her darling Frances, was ever present in her thoughts, like Rachel weeping for her children, she could not be comforted, and

FACT IN BROODING.—The human heart is a curiously strange instrument. It produces stranger vibrations, according to the skill of the hand that seeks to get music out of it. The art of approaching the mind from the right quarter, and successfully arousing its emotions, is one that every man does not understand. Some seem to have the gift of doing this thing very adroitly. We give the following as a specimen:

An English preacher advocating the generous support of an important charitable object, prefaced the circulation of the contribution boxes with this address to his hearers:

"From the great sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing I am afraid of, that some of you may feel inclined to give too much. Now, it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not unpleasant, yet should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will be immediately waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it thoroughly understood that no person will think of putting anything into the box who cannot pay his debts."

The result was an overflowing collection.

Lungren concedes in race against Bera

GOP Rep. Dan Lungren conceded defeat today in his tight race for Congress against Democratic challenger Dan Bera.

"I am confident that enough voters have been convinced to do otherwise that I will not be representing the citizens of the 7th Congressional District during the 113th Congress. It was a tough campaign and I accept the outcome," Lungren wrote in a statement.

"I congratulate Dan Bera in his victory and I wish him well as he accepts this new challenge. It may be that Dan Bera approaches Congress as he has it with a humble heart, respect for the institution and a desire to perform his duties in the best interests of the people he represents and the country."

The best results for the 7th Congressional District were 48.5 percent. The race has been expensive.

KEY FINDINGS

- Loads of the new Bay Bridge which double a major portion of previous concrete in the foundation of the spans require tests.
- Concrete test reports were added with errors, copied from the laboratory of the spans' original tests.
- Concrete contained a common additive to lower strength, but there is no record of this material. Finally, some testing errors by a test contractor.

Three days after the collapse of the Bay Bridge, the Bay Bridge Authority announced that the concrete used in the spans was not tested, and the bridge will stay open to traffic until the concrete is tested.

And Sacramento Mayor Kevin Johnson said Monday he will support the bridge's closure until the concrete is tested.

"I can't tell you whether they want to close the bridge or not, but I think it's important to know what's going on."

Think Big task force expands menu of possible projects for downtown Sacramento

The grant to construct a new sports arena in Sacramento now on hold, Mayor Kevin Johnson said Tuesday he was broadening the focus of his Think Big arena task force to explore other large projects throughout the city's downtown.

The committee — which raised roughly $20 million over the past year in its effort to build a new arena for the Sacramento Kings — will begin by focusing on development ideas for the downtown center. While an indoor sports arena remains a possibility, Think Big will also examine the feasibility of a long list of concepts that includes a major league baseball stadium, corporate headquarters and an entertainment district.

Think Big will also explore how best to revitalize the city's riverfront, continue the revitalization of K Street and work on a plan to activate the Woodfield Downtown Plaza. Johnson said the committee — made up of local elected officials, business representatives and urban leaders — would continue to operate with private funds.

How Bee reporter broke state parks investigation

From the Executive Editor
JOYCE TERHAAR

terhaar@sacbee.com

To understand how reporter Matt Weiser was able to break The Bee's state parks investigation, you need to go back a couple of years.

In June 2010, Weiser, reporter Marjie Landstrom and a handful of reporters from McClatchy's California newsmagazines worked together on a series of stories chronicling decay, crime and other problems within the state parks system.

Reporters are only as good as their sources, and Weiser made quite a few during that coverage. As parks up and down the state faced closure due to budget cuts this past year, he began hearing bits and pieces of rumors about mismanagement at headquarters.

Early on, "Nobody was willing to go on the record," Weiser said, because of fear of retribution.

Once one source retired, freeing him to speak publicly, and Weiser was introduced to another who could provide records, names and specific dates, the story took shape.

You've seen the results during the past month. On July 15 The Bee published a story reporting that a deputy parks director, Manuel Thomas Lopez, approved a settlement with the state.

Serious advice, and then a laugh

It's silly to be serious: That's the personal finance mix this week. At such a busy time of year, it seemed somehow fitting to offer a dollop of fun, along with some practical news bits.

So let's get the serious out of the way and then we'll proceed to checkout with the fun.

As the calendar ticks toward Dec. 31, here are some last-minute, year-end tips recommended by financial professionals:

Do your donations

If you want a charitable deduction on this year's taxes, you need to write that donation check by Dec. 31. Donations made on a credit card by Dec. 31 are deductible for 2012, even if you pay the Visa bill in 2013, the Internal Revenue Service says. A gift by check also counts for 2012, as long as it's mailed in December. Gifts to individuals - friends, family

How to give the gift of charity

The holidays are that generous time of year when hearts and wallets open wide. It's not only about giving gifts to family and friends, but also making charitable donations to causes we care about.

From the Red Cross to Red Rover, from food banks to foster kids, many Americans wait until December to their charitable giving inspired by the season, if not the tax deduction.

Charitable donations - the vast majority by individuals - hit $298.42 billion in 2011, still $11 billion below the 2007 high-water mark according to a June study by the Giving USA Foundation and the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University.

"When we see businesses giving or downsizing, it has an impact on giving. Many people are still feeling conservative (about donating) and understandably so," said Dawn Lindblom, CEO of the 11-county Sacramento chapter of the American organization at year-end, the IRS reminds that you can only deduct the fair market amount when the car is sold by the charity. This applies to vehicle deductions valued at $500 or more.

Spend those FSA dollars

If you have a Flexible Spending Account at work to cover health/dependent care costs, now's the time to make sure you've spent all those tax-free dollars you squirreled away. Since FSA accounts are use-it-or-lose-it, you don't want to let that

Taliban suggest they would share power

By Matthew Rosenberg
The Taliban has offered to go to a "negotiated settlement" with the Afghan government, a move that would mean the group would share power with the government, according to a report from the New York Times. The Taliban's offer is a significant development in the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan, which has lasted for more than a decade. The Taliban has been fighting against the U.S.-led coalition forces and the Afghan government since 2001. The offer comes as the Taliban has been making gains in the south and east of the country, and the U.S. has been withdrawing its troops. The offer is seen as a sign of the Taliban's willingness to negotiate, but it is also seen as a sign of the Taliban's desire to share power with the government. The offer is a significant development in the ongoing conflict in Afghanistan, which has lasted for more than a decade.
